

Research Methods and Sources - History Day

Primary Resources in Hawai'i

General guidance for students on finding and using primary sources

“Uses available primary sources” is one of the History Day judging standards.

The following pages detail information on libraries, archives, and museums in Hawai'i holding primary and secondary resources about the history of Hawai'i and beyond. Also provided are hints on what to expect at an archive, when using rare books or photos, or asking for help with your project. The goal is to make your experience as efficient and productive as possible while avoiding unexpected road blocks.

WHAT TO EXPECT

- Start early [everyone tells you that because it's true]. Many locations are open short hours, or need to retrieve materials from storage.
Extra time isn't really extra.
- Rare book libraries / archives will ask you to store your belongings in a locker. Bring a quarter<sup>1</sup> in case the locker needs one to operate. All the lockers give back the quarter when you leave.
- You may be asked to fill out / sign a user agreement or log into a register or database. In part, this helps librarians find you if they later locate a source you needed, or to notify you a photo or copying order is ready.
- Bring ID. You may be asked to leave an identification card with the librarian while you use a rare or valuable record. At University of Hawai'i and Hawai'i State Library Hawaiian collections you need an ID to use a rare book in the reading room, for example.
- Bring pencils, not pens, and blank paper<sup>2</sup> to take into the records search area. Computers for note taking are welcome most, but not all, places.
- Rare books cannot be checked out because they may get stolen. Archives do not check out primary records, so be prepared to take notes.
- Since you can't checkout rare books or archives, you may want to order photocopies. At most archives visitors don't make the photocopies. The librarian or archivist makes the copies and charges a fee. A few places will let you take your own digital photos, but some will not.
- Since many primary records are very old and fragile, you may use microfilm or a photocopy instead of the original. You may be told to sit at a special table near a librarian or archivist.

DO

- Before asking to access rare and archival documents, be sure you have reviewed several books or articles on the general topic you are researching.
  - Ask a Hawai'i State Library librarian if there is a bibliography on your topic. Go to HSL web site data bases and use the bibliography guides at U.S. History in Context or World History in Context.
  - On the HSL home page click on LOCATIONS then click on Hawaii State Library Sections and scroll to bottom for sections like Hawaii & Pacific – open the page to find many helpful guides including Bibliographies
  - Go to <http://www2.hawaii.edu/~speccoll/hawaiiibib.html> University of Hawai'i Library, Hawaiian Collection, web site for bibliographies.
- Maps showing where library books are shelved by catalog number are posted online, inside libraries on the walls, or as handouts. When planning a library visit, use catalog numbers / maps to find items efficiently. Assign team members to gather what you need from different areas of the Library and return to a central location. Example: map link at University of Hawai'i "About the Library" <http://library.manoa.hawaii.edu/>

Frequently Asked Questions ▾

Do: continued

- Build your own project bibliography as you go:
  - Write down the name of the library or archives and catalog number of each item. You may need to see that item again.
  - If you look at catalog records in an online library or archive, email the catalog record to yourself. If the web site doesn't offer email, copy and paste the catalog record into a word document to save the info.
  - If you get a photocopy or print from microfilm, turn the page over and write the document date (example: 31 Jan 1902), library, catalog number, and bibliographic information on the back.

- Find the reference book sections in the library for your general topic (example: government). Look at the books shelved there. Watch for specialty books that have narrowed the topic and will be more likely to have what you need (example: a reformer is more likely to be found in Who's Who in Prison Reform than in Who's Who 1956).

- When you find the book you came to get, look at other books all around 'your' book. The way books in a library are numbered means the books around your book are on the same topic. You might not have found them in your search of the catalog. Are they of interest?

- At an archive, always keep documents or photos in folders and in order as they came to you. If you are ordering copies, the archivist or librarian may give you an empty folder and ask you to put the ones you want to order in the empty folder. Or you may be asked to turn desired images at right angles.

- When telephoning a library or archives, you can ask for the "reference desk" to get information. Explain your project search in a few sentences, then ask a more specific question. Write down your questions before you call so you don't forget important things you want to ask.

- When looking for business or organizational records, call the company's main information number or "Public Information Office." Ask to speak with the company "Records Manager<sup>3</sup>." Explain your project and ask, "Who would be able to help me tell the story of X Company?" or something similar (yes, this is sucking up, but they have the key and you want them to turn it and let you in).

<sup>3</sup> A records manager is a corporate archivist - but they are also charged with protecting the company. They may be less receptive than a public archivist. Be tactful, but never lie about your topic or purpose.

Do: continued

- Keep a record of places you looked / searched, but found nothing of interest. If you are working as a team, this can be especially important. It can save one person thinking a search was missed when another person did look. If you don't remind yourself that you looked and found nothing, you may later think, "Why didn't I look at X?" You end up repeating a search or revisiting a library /archive. Sometimes the lack of a record may be an important clue. Keep these 'found nothing' bibliography entries in your working list right up until you finish writing your paper. [This advice comes from hard experience - and wasted time!]

DON'T

- Don't expect a librarian to do the research for you. They can give you ideas, but you are the researcher.
- NEVER bring food or drink - even water - into a library or archives.
- NEVER use your cell phone in a library or archives. Leave ringer on vibrate; take calls outside. Others are trying to think, read in a second language, read faded, scrawled handwriting, stare at faded microfilm, etc. They need their brain - and so do you. It is a little known fact that people can live up to 10 hours without making a cell phone call or texting!
- Some places don't allow spiral bound notebooks or large folders of loose paper into the search room (documents could be hidden and stolen).
- NEVER write your notes on paper that is sitting on top of the archival records or trace over illustrations in books (it will damage the record).

Primary Sources only you can access:

YOUR FAMILY is a living repository of archival, primary sources. History is more than dates, rulers, wars, and who hit whom. History is in the many stories of families like yours.

You don't need to put your belongings in a locker or sign a form to get access to a rare stash of photos, artifacts, documents, newspaper clippings, cards, and letters. This 'library' is open every day of the week and online all the time!

Your parents, grandparents, uncles, and aunts lived through incidents in history. ASK! You can do an oral history and maybe get some of Auntie's prize winning cookies or killer chili if you time your visit right. There are no parking or entrance fees. You can make all the copies and photos you want. You will be helping document Hawaii's history, while making your project more interesting with primary sources. Ask your family how history tasted, smelled, sounded, and felt. You have access to the most restricted primary sources - your family's memories. Record those stories and share them with others.

Note: Information was correct when collected, but time passes and so do people, phone numbers, etc. Please report errors and omissions to Anita Manning manninga001@hawaii.rr.com
